Dear Kehlani / Management,

I kindly wish to withdraw the message I sent previously. After further reflection and confirmation, I recognize that it is not aligned for me to pursue or open this connection. Please disregard the contents of that email and know there is no need to invest any time or energy into it.

Wishing you clarity and alignment on your path.

Respectfully,
Susan Ndinga Wright

Dear Kehlani and/or Management Team,

I hope this finds you well. I am reaching out not as a conventional fan, but as someone exploring the intersection of spiritual consciousness, synchronicity, and creative manifestation. My work investigates how individual intentions interact with collective frequencies, and how this understanding can guide both personal growth and broader creative systems.

Recently, I've observed patterns suggesting that certain spiritual "calls"—intentions sent into the universe—can manifest connections in very tangible ways. For context, I've explored these patterns in my work with Transcendental Tarot and other methods of divination, noticing instances where expressed intentions aligned with real-world events or meetings.

Given this, I am curious if, between the nights of September 6th–7th, you had shared any intention—whether consciously or through creative expression—about the type of connection or partner you were inviting into your life. It is also possible that what I experienced was me perceiving, or even dreaming through, the perspective of the person you might have met that night. If that is the case, I would humbly suggest nurturing that connection—it may be the one meant for you.

I understand this may sound unusual, but I have been recording and analyzing many such synchronicities, and I cannot deny my own observations. If my perspective can help another fraction of self—or manifest as guidance for someone on the other side—then I believe it should be shared. We often worry too much about titles, professions, or perceived hierarchies. I see everyone simply as another child of God, just as I am, and no one is higher or better because of status; if anything, many hide behind it.

To provide context for my approach, I have documented much of my research and creative exploration through a variety of writings and projects, ranging from spiritual and metaphysical investigations to creative and scientific experiments. I share this not to overwhelm, but to provide insight into the structured, multidimensional framework through which I observe synchronicities and spiritual patterns.

To clarify, my intention is purely research-oriented: I aim to map and refine my understanding of how spiritual and creative energies converge in real-world experiences. Any insight you could share, even just to confirm or deny whether you sent a general call of this nature, would be incredibly valuable for this work.

I deeply respect your time and your creative space, and I am sharing this from a place of professional curiosity and spiritual research rather than personal solicitation. My goal is to better understand the mechanisms at play, which will allow me to approach future synchronicities with greater clarity and integrity.

Thank you very much for considering this request. Attached are some of my documented works and ongoing projects, to provide context for my research and perspectives.

With respect and clarity,
Susan Ndinga Wright
